For Today: Two Stories of Faithfulness

John Wesley preached three sermons a day for 54 years, preaching more than 44,000 times. He travelled by horseback and carriage more than 200,000 miles (around 5,000 miles a year), knew 10 languages, published a four-volume commentary on the Bible, an English dictionary, five volumes on natural philosophy, four volumes on church history, histories of England and Rome, grammar books on Hebrew, Latin, Greek, French and English, three works on medicine, six volumes of church music, seven volumes of sermons and controversial papers, edited a library of fifty books, arose at 4 a.m., and worked solidly to 10 p.m.

He said, "I have more hours of private retirement than any man in England." At 83, he was irritated because he could no longer write more than 15 hours a day without hurting his eyes. On his 85th birthday he wrote that he felt no weariness while travelling or preaching.

But at 86 he was ashamed that he could no longer preach more than twice a day. He complained in his diary that he had an increasing tendency to sleep in till 5:30 a.m.

The king of Syracuse was a tyrant. Having condemned a man named Damon to death, he granted him permission to visit his wife and children one last time. The condition was that if he failed to return, his best friend, Phintias, would be executed in his place. As the day of the execution got nearer and Damon still had not returned, the king visited Phintias and said, "What a fool you were to put up your life in exchange for your friend." Phintias replied, "My friend is a man of honor and will do his utmost to return. However, I am hoping and praying that for some reason he will be unable to return. I would be honored to die in his place." Soon the day arrived, and there was still no sign of Damon. Phintias was led to the scaffold. There he addressed the people and told them how glad he was that he could ransom the life of his friend. Suddenly, from the back of the crowd, there was a great disturbance, and the crowd parted as Damon made his way to the front just in time. Damon was disappointed and said to the king that if he couldn't die for his friend, he'd die with him. And the king was so overwhelmed at this show of faithfulness, he pardoned them both.

Be of the same mind one toward another. Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate. Be not wise in your own conceits.

Benediction

For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God to salvation for everyone who believes, for the Jew first and also for the Greek. For in it the righteousness of God is revealed from faith to faith; as it is written, "The just shall live by faith." For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who suppress the truth in unrighteousness.

Romans 1:16-18 NKJV
